

Forecast For Northwest England
Issued by Met Office Exeter
at 0400 on Tuesday 23 Feb 2021

++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:

Rain and gales in the north, mainly dry further south.

Today:

A wet start in the north of the region, with outbreaks of rain through the morning, some locally heavy. This will become more widespread and heavier later, mainly dry in southern areas. Cloudy with gales for many, especially along coasts. Maximum temperature 12 deg C (54 deg F).

Tonight:

This evening, rain in the north will continue, still heavy at times, easing overnight. Further outbreaks will also affect southern areas into the night. Winds begin easing throughout, feeling mild. Minimum temperature 10 deg C (50 deg F).

Wednesday:

Another wet and windy day, though less blustery than recently. Continued outbreaks of rain across the region through the day. Winds easing later, feeling mild throughout. Maximum temperature 13 deg C (55 deg F).

Outlook for Thursday to Saturday:

Sunshine and showers on Thursday, with light winds. Dry with sunny spells on Friday. Some light rain and sunny spells on Saturday, largely dry. Mild days but increasingly colder nights.

(C) Crown Copyright 2021. Published by the Met Office.